The GIG Economy

FUTURE
OF

SECTION 1: INTRODUCTION

GIG Economy / Sharing Economy

- The gig economy uses digital platforms to connect freelancers with customers to provide short-term services or asset-sharing.
- Examples include ride-hailing apps, food delivery apps, and holiday rental apps.
- It's a growing segment, bringing economic benefits of productivity and employment.
- But it also raises questions about levels of consumer and worker protection.
- The challenge is to balance innovation with a fair deal for workers.

1. Upwork (US)

Upwork is a freelancing website that connects clients and freelancers from across the globe.

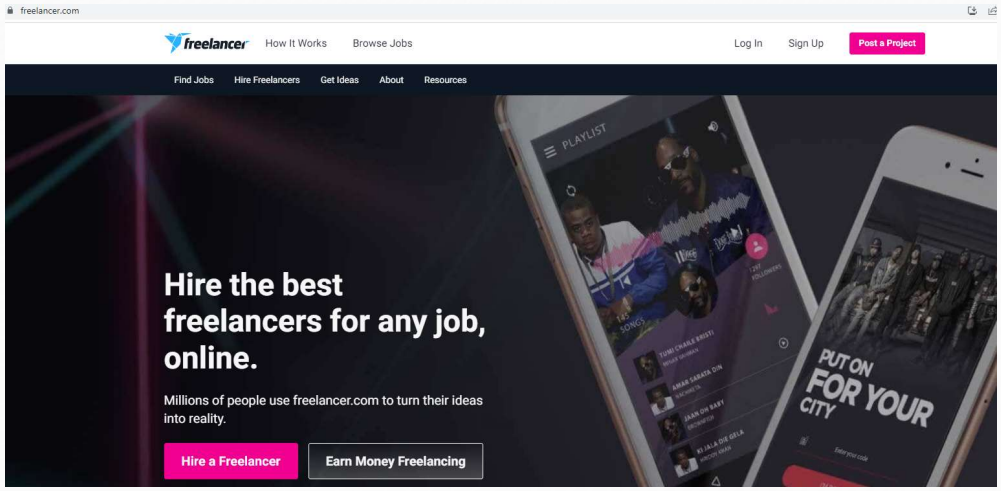

The platform provides a wide range of categories, from web design and software development to customer service and accounting.

Clients and freelancers have multiple ways to connect – clients can choose to post a job and hire talent or buy a predefined service from the project catalog. Similarly, freelancers can access the job board and offer a service to sell.

- Pros: payment protection, credible clients, budget-based projects

- Cons: lengthy selection process, high service fee

2. Freelancer (Australia)

- Pros: progress tracker, live chat, 24/7 customer support
- Cons: complex interface, spam applicants, and fake clients

Freelancer.com is another freelance website where professionals and companies from around the world collaborate on various projects. Thanks to the wide range of expertise, clients can easily find an expert of any type.

You can sign up as a freelancer or business owner. Signing up as a freelancer will require you to fill out a short registration form. Provide detailed information, including your skills, educational background, and work experience.

In addition to projects, there are many contests, such as visual or design work. Freelancers can benefit from these contests by earning money along with reviews on their profiles.

3. Toptal (US)

Toptal is a freelance website that connects highly qualified freelance industry experts with companies. Toptal has a broad range of freelancers, from web developers and web designers to finance consultants and product managers.

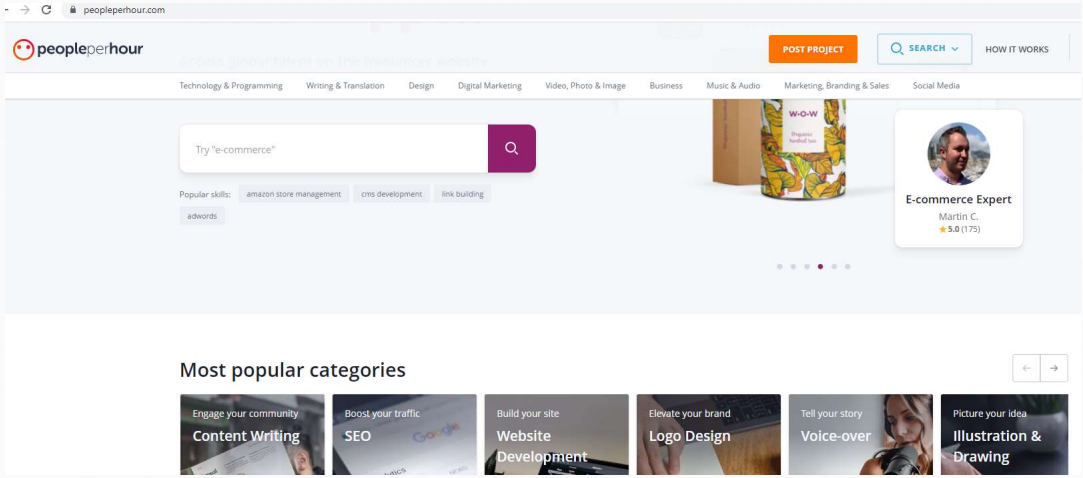

Applying to Toptal as a freelancer requires passing five steps of the screening process, from a comprehensive English evaluation to a project assessment. This process ensures only the top 3% make it to the platform.

After passing all of the steps, you'll have access to various job postings from top clients and companies, such as Motorola and Airbnb. However, failing the test will put your application process on hold for up to a few months.

•Pros: top-tier companies and talent, free invoicing and payments

•Cons: extensive screening process, big projects only

4. People Per Hour (UK)

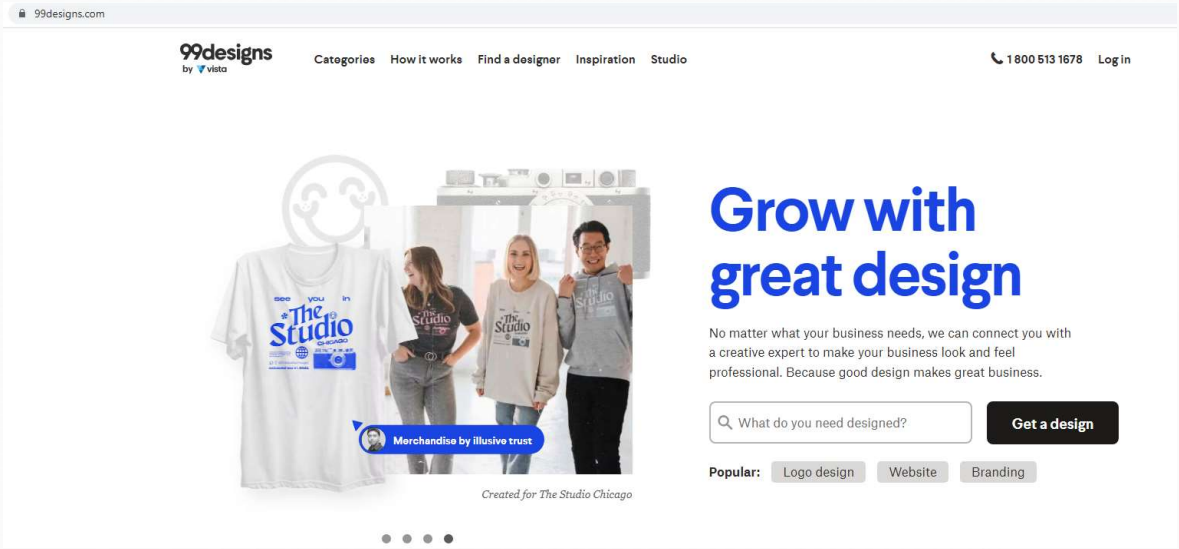

As the name suggests, People Per Hour helps businesses find professional freelancers to hire by the hour or project. There are millions of freelancers from different industries, such as public relations, marketing, and journalism.

Freelancers can create an account for free and start setting up a profile. Note that the moderators will review each application before approving it. Once approved, freelancers can start browsing for jobs in multiple categories.

When working on a project, freelancers can send offers and set their prices. Once they finish, they can easily raise an invoice from their dashboard.

- Pros: automated invoice, location-based listings, secure payment
- Cons: free bids are limited to $15/month

5. 99 Designs (Australia)

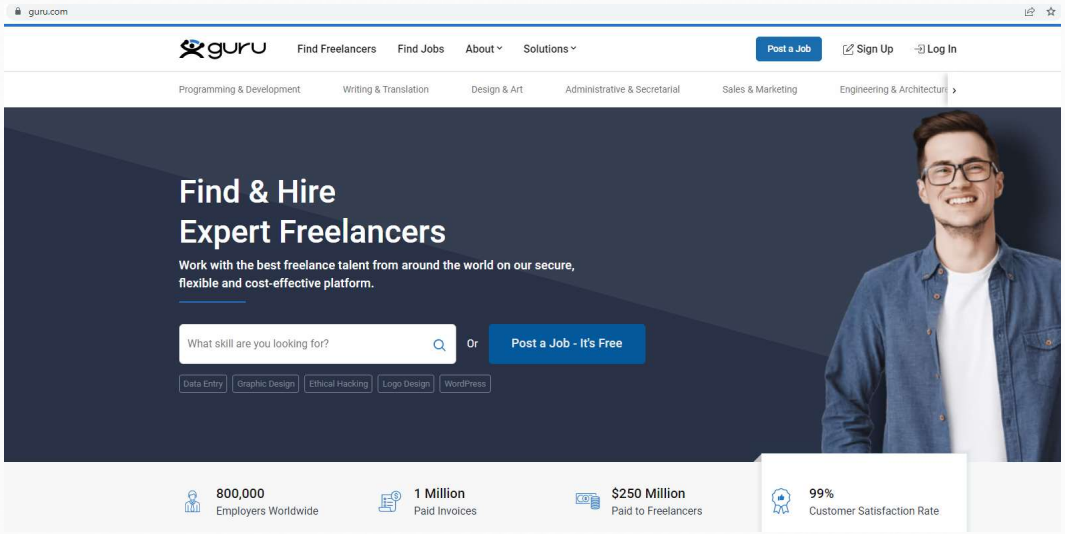

For freelance designers looking for jobs, 99designs offers plenty of options. It is a freelance website specially tailored for designers and businesses to collaborate. There are various design projects available, from logo design and book covers to clothing and merchandise.

Upon signing up, you'll be instructed to build a profile and include your work experience. The curation team will review your application and determine your designer level. The higher your level, the more visibility you get on the platform.

99designs makes looking for freelance jobs of your expertise easy. By selecting industries, styles, and design categories, you will have access to a list of jobs to choose from.

- Pros: dedicated environment, payment security, active community
- Cons: high service fees, the designer level can be limited

6. Guru (US)

•Pros: secure payment, customized job listings, free membership

•Cons: potential fake clients

Guru is a place for freelancers and companies across the globe to work together. Companies can hire professionals with various skills, such as programmers, graphic designers, and product managers.

This freelance website makes it easy to browse job listings and submit quotes to clients. Start by signing up and building a freelancer profile. The system will give job recommendations based on your skill-set and work experience.

Freelancers can bid for long or short-term projects and give a fixed price for each project. There are multiple withdrawal methods to receive your earnings, including PayPal and wire transfer. More importantly, the site ensures freelancers get paid timely with SafePay protection.

7. Fiverr (Is*)

Fiverr is a platform that connects freelancers with business owners looking for services in various digital projects, including website design, content writing, and voice-overs.

This freelance website provides a streamlined method for both freelancers and business owners to interact with one another. Note that on the website, freelancers are called sellers, their services – gigs, and business owners – buyers.

Instead of sending out bids, sellers can sign up for free, list their gigs, and set their prices. Meanwhile, buyers can simply browse through different categories to purchase.

- Pros: diverse category, free registration, online courses
- Cons: high commission charge, long payment process

Cover Letter

"One trick is to look at the feedback on the client's Upwork profile when applying; other freelancers will call them by their first name in the feedback. This lets me start my application with their name. By doing this, I leave the client wondering how I know their name, which draws them to my profile to see if they know me. It also shows that I am very interested in the job and collaborating with them; I paid attention to their job description and looked even further. Finally, it makes the application more personal."
– Andreea-Lucia Mihalache, Upwork Top Rated Freelance Writer

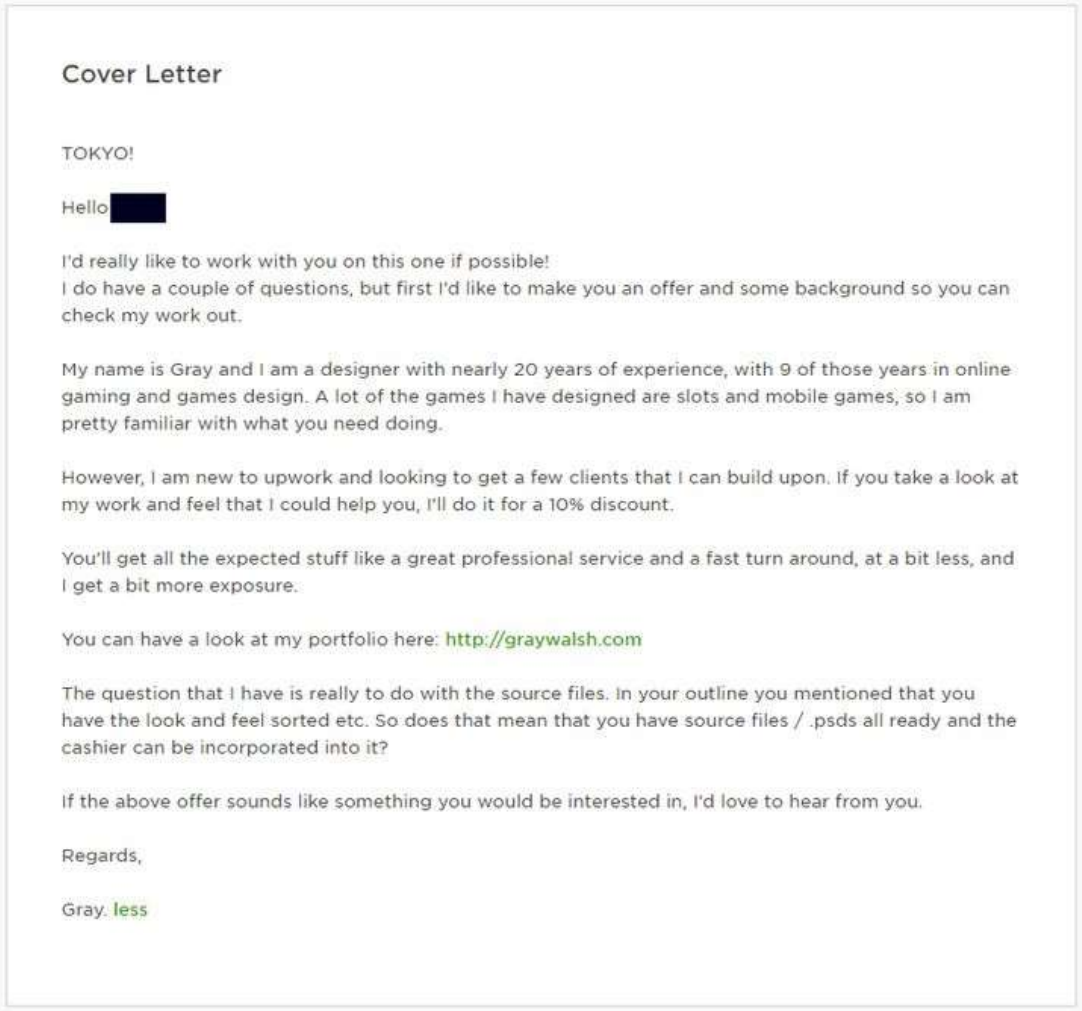

Cover Letter

1. Choose the correct cover letter format and style
2. Create a unique cover letter for each application
3. Limit the cover letter to one page
4. Address the hiring manager
5. Add relevant wording or keywords
6. Add some personality
7. Showcase your achievements
8. Stay away from buzzwords
9. Highlight your remote work experience
10. Proofread and edit your cover letter multiple times

Cover Letter

11. Have others review your cover letter
12. Include links to previous work
13. Add LinkedIn link
14. Explain employment gaps
15. Don’t regurgitate your resume
16. Follow the instructions in the job post
17. Explain why you’re a good fit for the company
18. Use a professional email
19. Don’t copy from the internet
20. Make them want to learn more

TOKYO!

Hello [redacted]

I'd really like to work with you on this one if possible!
I do have a couple of questions, but first I'd like to make you an offer and some background so you can check my work out.

My name is Gray and I am a designer with nearly 20 years of experience, with 9 of those years in online gaming and games design. A lot of the games I have designed are slots and mobile games, so I am pretty familiar with what you need doing.

However, I am new to upwork and looking to get a few clients that I can build upon. If you take a look at my work and feel that I could help you, I'll do it for a 10% discount.

You'll get all the expected stuff like a great professional service and a fast turn around, at a bit less, and I get a bit more exposure.

You can have a look at my portfolio here: http://graywalsh.com

The question that I have is really to do with the source files. In your outline you mentioned that you have the look and feel sorted etc. So does that mean that you have source files / .psds all ready and the cashier can be incorporated into it?

If the above offer sounds like something you would be interested in, I'd love to hear from you.

Regards,

Gray. less

https://www.upwork.com/resources/how-to-set-your-freelance-rate

https://www.upwork.com/resources/how-much-do-freelancers-make

Pricing

1. Ask yourself these basic questions before you start

   - How much money do I need to make to support my lifestyle?
   - How much money do I want to make as a goal?
   - What do other freelancers charge for similar services?
   - How much money would I make as a full-time employee?
   - What expenses do I have as a freelance business owner?
   - Are my skills in demand?
   - How much value am I bringing to the client?

2. Set your annual salary goal
3. Consider the number of billable hours you need to work
4. Incorporating freelancer expenses into your price
5. Know the market rate for your services
6. Understand your value

Pricing

Fixed Price

Focus is on the result. Take your experience, dependability, and speed into consideration instead of just using the amount of hours you think it will take when calculating your project fee.

Hourly

Hourly rate is the best way to get paid fairly for their time, as well as to figure out how to bring in their desired income

Pricing

Pricing Factors:

1. Years of experience
2. Specific skill set
3. Education and training
4. Reviews and proven deliverables
5. Location
